To these ends, the Office of Spiritual Life through its many resources and avenues engages:

- mature spiritual formation
- moral reasoning
- personal responsibility
- community cohesion, care, and sustainability
- active engagement in the search for meaning
- lively conversations about the ways of knowing and contributing
- religious commitment
- energetic engagement with religious diversity
- spiritual practices through worship, study, and personal reflection

Perhaps one of the greatest attributes of Furman University is the growing diversity of its student body and faculty. The many religious organizations active at Furman provide students with opportunities for worship, fellowship, and faith formation. These groups encourage students to mature in their journey, to remember and reflect on their religious heritage, and to take part in programs that enable them to practice the moral and spiritual aspects of faith.
