ACCREDITATION

Accreditation means that the university has been recognized by some official authority as providing the highest level of advanced training. Accreditation ensures that the program is offering expansive, quality education in its intended field. Essentially, the accrediting body evaluates the graduate program and gives it a stamp of approval. Accreditation can affect obtaining licensure (if applicable) and future career and education opportunities, so it is recommended that you attend an accredited program. Not sure what your accrediting organization is for your field? Ask your faculty!

Examples:

Medical Degree: Liaison Committee on Medical Education

Master of Arts in Counseling: Council for Accreditation of Counseling and Related Educational Programs (CACREP)
