Dean Cassidy

Missed y'all last week; was with my mom in Chapel Hill, NC while she was in her last week of CAR-T therapy for cancer. She is doing well - in remission.

Check out the Student Activism website and the following slides.

Check out the Voting Resources website.

Grief Support Group meets on Wednesdays at 4 p.m. in Daniel Chapel Student Lounge.

Peaceful demonstrations and protests

- Only students, faculty and staff are allowed to organize a demonstration or protest. External individuals are not allowed to participate in demonstrations or protests on university property.
- Students and Recognized Student Organizations (RSOs) must register any demonstration or protest with the Dean of Students no later than seven (7) days prior to the event.
- The Dean of Students' Office can help in coordinating logistics.
- University officials may make reasonable efforts to accommodate spontaneous or impromptu demonstrations or protests, including counter-demonstrations, in proper consultation with campus partners.

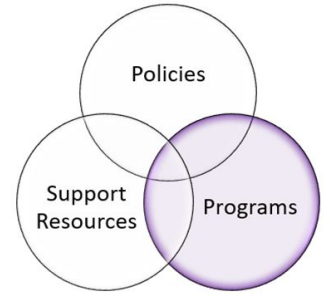

Peaceful demonstrations and protests

- Events must be orderly, peaceful, and safe, whether hosting a guest speaker, planning a march, or organizing a protest. These events must not disrupt campus operations.
- Encampments and barricades are prohibited.
- No overnight or multiple-day demonstrations or protests are allowed.
- Generally, protests and demonstrations are not allowed indoors.

Suggested guidelines for healthy discourse

Be respectful and curious. Approach others with generosity, especially if you disagree with them. Don't insult people or their ideas. Ask questions to help you understand different perspectives.

Listen, then speak for yourself. Pause before speaking and yield to those who have spoken least. Don't assume the values or intentions of others and recognize that people have the right to advocate different ideas and in different ways than you. Avoid speaking in dismissive absolutes (e.g., "all those people are..." "no intelligent person thinks...").

Use good argumentation. Support arguments with your own authentic experiences, with reasoning that people generally support, and with publicly-accessible facts. Withhold any claims that presume to have all the evidence and reasons on one side, and note areas of agreement and disagreement as you go.

Suggested guidelines for healthy discourse

Whenever possible, create community agreements and use moderators or trained facilitators. Understand what level of confidentiality speakers would like, so that people feel safe expressing themselves. Determine a speaking order, or in more formal cases like a group or class discussion, see if an instructor or moderator can recognize speakers to ensure equal access. A good facilitator can also help ensure any of the other guidelines were met, if they have the community's agreement to intervene.

Leave the space in a better way than you found it. Observe and report how discourse helped build a stronger community, how it helped move forward your thinking, how it made you more sympathetic to an argument you had previously rejected, or how it will help inspire action. If none of that is true, which happens in rare cases, simply thank the people who took their time to respond.

Create an environment for open exchange of ideas

Administrators, faculty, and staff should encourage thoughtful and respectful dialogue on contentious topics while ensuring that all voices are heard and respected.

- Promote diverse perspectives
- Foster open dialogue
- Encourage critical thinking
- Reduce polarization
- Prepare students for civic engagement
- Build bridges between communities
